Lesson 10: Intergenerational Small Groups

There are many ways to compose a FaithTalk group. One very helpful way that is both biblically faithful and culturally relevant is to have a group that is truly intergenerational—including children, tweens, teens, young adults and older adults.

In this lesson, Charles Albrecht who is a father of two children, and a participant for many years in intergenerational small groups, discusses his insights.

As you watch the video, answer the following questions:

1. What is the impact on our culture of “cocooning”? What is the impact on your family and your small group?
2. What do you think are the primary benefits for your FaithTalk group to be intentionally intergenerational?
3. What challenges would you face in making your group intergenerational? How do you think you’d address those challenges?
4. How would you handle the child-care issue?
5. If your group is not now intergenerational, and you want it to be, what is your next step?
